CLEANING A MAMMALIAN HEART FOR DISPLAY PURPOSES

C. Romero-Sierra, J.K. Desmarreau, & K.C. Carlson
Department of Anatomy, Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 3N6, Canada

Some steps in the preparation of biological specimens for museum display are very time-consuming and damaging, for example, the elimination of fatty tissue from visceral organs by curettage. A method of chemical degreasing has been explored and results indicate it is useful in shortening the time of cleaning beef hearts of their fat. Chloroform had a harsher effect on the fat than did acetone.
